Description
Dear Sir/Madam,
I'm a PhD student in political economy at MIT and study the economic roots of political behavior. I found the BHPS a great source for my resource, but have a particular questions that I haven't been able to answer so far. I am looking for a longitudinal dataset that has both questions on political attitudes towards government policies, e.g. social redistribution, spending on health care, etc., and information on households' economic situation, in particular its indebtedness. As far as I can see, the Understanding Society Panel does not have questions on social redistribution. I know that the Wealth and Asset Survey and to a limited extend the BHS Derived Current and Annual Net Household Income Variables get at the latter part, but they do not include the political attitude variables. Hence my question if there is a subset or part of the BHS (or any other survey) that contains both of those dimensions, or is there a way to match households or individuals from the BHS panel to one of those other surveys?
Thanks so much for your help.
Best,
Andreas

The surviving households from BHPS are now part of the Understanding Society study, where they were first interviewed at Wave 2. The documentation is searchable, e.g. like this;

https://www.understandingsociety.ac.uk/search?q=politic&t=mainstage_variable

You can also have a look at the longterm content plan for when questions on specific topics will be carried, here;

<https://www.understandingsociety.ac.uk/documentation/mainstage/long-term-content-plan>

As you probably are aware, the BHPS thesaurus is a good starting point for exploring the content of BHPS;

<https://www.iser.essex.ac.uk/bhps/documentation/volb/indexes/thesaurus.html>

The new user guide explains all about the overlap between the two studies and how the data may be linked;

Dear Andreas,

Unfortunately neither the BHPS nor Understanding Society have carried the political questions that you are interested in. We have questions about political interest, political efficacy and political support, and the BHPS in the past has carried attitudinal questions about views of government, but not in the depth that you need.

Have you tried looking at the British Election Study? This has a longitudinal element (but only for a couple of waves after each election) and it is likely to have the questions about redistribution etc that you are interested in.

There is some information about it here: <http://discover.ukdataservice.ac.uk/series/?sn=200003>

Documentation for the "British Election Study Six-Wave Panel Survey, 2005-2009" is available:

<http://discover.ukdataservice.ac.uk/catalogue/?sn=6607&type=Data%20catalogue#documentation>

The British Election Study is not managed by us at ISER and it is not possible to merge the Election Study into the BHPS because the samples are different.

I hope that helps.
