Description
Is there any way to find out roughly how many respondents are sampled within a particular local authority, so as to decide whether it is worth getting the special license geographical markers? I'm interested in the sample size within Bristol City. Thanks

The sampling design is explained in the user guide and in more detail in a working paper referenced in the user guide. We interview households in most local authorities, but due to clustering and randomisation you won't be able to replicate this purely from a description of the design. To answer this question you would have to apply for access to the local authority codes.
